1 Air quality in China

B	C	D	A	B	C	A

Begründungen

0

The speaker says: "Most of China's major cities are shrouded in smog. Like Lanzhou, they're facing huge environmental strains, like the break-neck pace of urbanization." China's big towns are therefore mostly covered in thick polluted fog.

1

The speaker says: "China's cities are absorbing a tidal wave of newcomers from the countryside, about 20 million a year. That means more roads, more cars, more steel, more smelters - more pollution." The rapid growth of Chinese towns is therefore brought about by internal migration of rural people.

2

The speaker says: "It's a reminder that China's show-stopping economic rise has come at a huge cost to the environment. But analysts say attitudes are shifting. People are drawing a line, especially when it comes to their health." In regard to health and the environment China's citizens are therefore changing their minds.

3

The speaker says: "We advise the elderly to do exercise in a gym." Therefore, patients who are old are advised to do physical activities indoors.

4

The speaker says: "Two years ago, the U.S. embassy in Beijing began doing something the Chinese government refused to do: it posted air quality readings - from a monitor on its roof to Twitter. Eventually, the Chinese government gave in to public pressure and began publishing its own data." Therefore, the U.S. mission in the capital measured air pollutants to inform the internet community.

5

The speaker says: "Tom Young is a biologist in Shanghai. But his hobby is to crunch the numbers on air pollution. He shows me his website, where he funnels public data into tidy graphs so that anyone can see." Therefore, Tom Young runs a homepage to visualize environmental facts.

6

The speaker says: "While he crunches the numbers, China's environmentalists are getting bolder. There has been an uptick in massive protests over health risks related to industrial projects. Some have turned violent." Opposition by Chinese conservationists is therefore increasing.

2 The Apple logo and the brain

Begründungen

0

The speaker says: "A new study indicates that the logo on Apple products like iPods, iPhones, iMacs, stimulates your brain." Therefore, research shows the Apple logo can increase mental activity.

1

The speaker says: "The study found that people who were shown the Apple logo scored higher on a creativity test than those who were exposed to the IBM logo." Therefore, in an experiment the Apple logo helped people to perform better than others in a certain area.

2

The speaker says: "When they think about the IBM logo, they think about the general notion of competence or professional." Therefore, the IBM logo makes people reflect on skills and abilities.

3

The speaker says: "You know, we showed people on the computer for very, very short durations, like 30 milliseconds, either the Apple logo or the IBM logo and then we looked at their behaviour to see if, as you say, they hummed compositions or not." Therefore, the experts used logos to study people's reactions.

4

The speaker says: "But no, to ensure sort of the integrity of the project we've never actually even spoken to anyone at any of the companies whose logos we use." Therefore, the researchers did not talk to the firms in question.

5

The speaker says: "And then we should be strategically surrounding ourselves with logos that have associations that we find to be desirable." Therefore, we should focus on logos which remind us of something pleasant.

6

The speaker says: "If every time you see an Apple logo you find yourself being more creative, you're gonna be a little happier in all likelihood." Therefore, if a logo boosts creativity, we will feel a bit better.

7

The speaker says: "We as consumers will start to pair the brand that we're being exposed to with this increased happiness and that should, you know, result in some increase in loyalty from their customers, I would imagine, over time." Therefore, the feelings that logos create can strengthen commitment to a company.

8

The speaker says: "His study of the impact of logos appears in the April issue of the Journal of Consumer Research. Thanks." Therefore, the research described in the interview can be found in a publication.

3 Flipping the classroom

Begründungen

0

The speaker says: "Welcome to the 21st century classroom. It's a world where students watch lectures at home and do homework at school." The new teaching concept therefore reverses class and homework elements.

1

The speaker says: "When Bennett High School sophomore Jessica Miller sits down to do her chemistry homework, she pulls out her notebook, then she turns on an iPad." Therefore, for her task, the high school student in Colorado needs to use a mobile device.

2

The speaker says: "Miller can replay parts of the chemistry video podcast she doesn't understand and fast forward through those that make sense." Therefore, if the student has problems in understanding, she can watch sections of the tutorial again.

3

The speaker says: "Chemistry teacher Jennifer Goodnight walks up and down the rows of her classroom giving verbal quizzes, guiding students through labs and answering questions." Therefore, back in class, instructors will monitor students' understanding.

4

The speaker says: "She's part of a growing group of teachers using the concept since it emerged here in the state in 2007. So far, she says it's paying off with better test scores." Therefore, educators trying the new method found out that it can improve exam results.

5

The speaker says: "He says the concept is popular in math and science classes, where students can easily become frustrated working problem sets at home." Flipped classes are therefore well-liked in subjects which require analytical skills.

6

The speaker says: "Now you can simply just take about five steps and record a video and then simply send it to your students and your parents and keep everybody informed, so now we are becoming even more transparent." A headmaster therefore points out that it has become easy to create short films and pass them on.

7

The speaker says: “I can listen to the video as well when they need help and then I can try to help him understand what she’s saying.” Parents therefore like flipped classrooms because they can support their children.

Begründungen

0

The speaker says: "But let's face it, it's not easy to jump-start a writing career anywhere. But in Peru, where books are expensive and published in very small numbers, it's especially tough." Therefore, it is difficult to become a writer in Peru because books are expensive and only few books are published.

1

The speaker says: "But now there's Lucha Libro. It's based on Mexico's Lucha Libre, where wrestlers put on masks and pseudonyms to duke it out in a ring. Here the contestants put [on] masks and use fake names, too, but they take to the ring to write short stories, on the clock and in front of a live crowd." Lucha Libro participants therefore have to put on masks and choose pseudonyms before they go on stage.

2

The speaker says: "On a chilly Monday night, a bar called La Noche is packed. Usually people come to see live bands, but tonight they are here for Lucha Libro [...]." Therefore, people normally come to the location of Lucha Libro to see live bands.

3

The speaker says: "At the end of a match, the losing writer has to take off their mask. The winner goes on to the next round, a week later. And the grand prize? It's a book contract." The overall best participant of the whole event will therefore be rewarded with a book contract.

4

The speaker says: "No one is talking, but just a paragraph in, Chicken Wilson freezes. The seconds are ticking by, so the crowd starts cheering him on. ... And he rallies, dashing off a short story about monkeys living in the city, and an American girl on vacation in Peru." Therefore, the main characters of Chicken Wilson's story are monkeys and an American girl.

5

The speaker says: "He says that even though Peru's economy is doing well right now, Peru is still feeling the impact of some hard decades. There was the military government in the 70s, the civil war in the 80s, and then, the collapse of the economy." Therefore, it is said that Peru's current economic situation is doing well.

6

The speaker says: "One young woman with a pale blond braid falling out the back of her black wrestler's mask calls herself L, like the letter. ... 'When I write, I often write lyrical pieces, poems, and I usually sign them with that one letter.'" The female writer therefore frequently produces lyrical pieces, poems.

7

The speaker says: "Whoever wins the final round in a few weeks will have six months to finish their book. It'll be released at the Lima Book Fair, where the writer will take off the mask and reveal his or her real identity, for the first time." Therefore, at the major literary event half a year later the most successful participant will take off the mask and reveal his or her identity.

8

The speaker says: "He says it's also about changing the idea that literature is boring. According to him, this turns it into an event." Lucha Libro might therefore help people realize that literature is not boring.
